“Bumbled” brings Irish humor with an environmental twist to Inner-City Arts

LOS ANGELES, Calif. (May 2025) — Greater LA arts supporters have a fantastic night of theater in store May 29 at 6 p.m., with the hilarious and touching “Bumbled” at Inner-City Arts. Follow Pascal, an Irish honeybee, as he tries to prove the importance of bees, save the planet, and find true happiness with his French love, the unforgettable Marion — all while dodging exploding balls, potential loss of manhood, and the ever-looming threat of death. “Bumbled” is a one-man show filled with bee-twerking, Irish slow-dancing, and a race against time where “too late” comes sooner than you think.

About the show’s origins, creators Bernard McMullan and Colin Hamell share an idea conceived over a bottle of wine with an Irish beekeeper in Spain grew into a tale worth spreading. “Sometimes when you find yourself sitting amid nature and learning how it really works, it dawns on you that you have a definite responsibility to at least try to help preserve it. And as Irishmen, you also have an obligation to take the piss out of it. Because that’s just what we do,” Hamell says.

This fun and inspiring evening for adults at The Rosenthal Theater on Inner-City Arts’ beautiful downtown campus at 720 Kohler St. will include a cocktail reception featuring honey-inspired drinks and a post-show Q&A with the star Colin Hamell. All proceeds directly support Inner-City Arts’ free and low-cost arts programs for youth. Tickets are available at <https://inner-cityarts.org/events/bumbled/>.
